Holyday, Hunter win T.O. ridings

Byelections. Voters put Premier Kathleen Wynne on a shorter leash, giving the PCs a Toronto foothold as the NDP take ridings in London and Windsor

Voters put Premier Kathleen Wynne's minority government on a shorter leash in five byelections Thursday, giving the Progressive Conservatives a long-sought toehold in Toronto and handing ridings in London and Windsor to the NDP.

Wynne's Liberals held Scarborough-Guildwood and former premier Dalton McGuinty's Ottawa South stronghold while Toronto Deputy Mayor Doug Holyday won Etobicoke-Lakeshore in the only gain of the night for Conservative Leader Tim Hudak, whose party had been leading in the polls in Ottawa and London.

Andrea Horwath's New Democrats emerged with bragging rights for the night after handily taking London West — where Hudak was campaigning until the polls closed — and a strong showing in Windsor-Tecumseh, knocking the Liberals to third place in the biggest victory margin of the evening.

For Hudak, the win by former Etobicoke mayor Holyday over Liberal Peter Milczyn, a city councillor, marked the first Tory seat in Toronto since the 1999 election.

But it was less than Conservatives had hoped with five Liberal ridings up for grabs at a time when Hudak — who faces criticism about his ability to win as leader — has been pitching himself as the best alternative to a Liberal government under fire for the $585 million gas plant debacle.

In Scarborough-Guildwood, Liberal community activist Mitzie Hunter held off Tory Ken Kirupa and former TTC chair Adam Giambrone, who took the NDP nomination amid controversy after he had already recruited a candidate there.

The byelections were the first electoral test for Wynne, who took over McGuinty's minority government in February promising to work more collegially with opposition parties.

Wynne had been downplaying Liberal expectations, saying all along that no matter what happened in the byelections, she would still be premier on Friday.

The 'Ford' factor

In Toronto, the "Ford factor" loomed large with Mayor Rob Ford campaigning for Doug Holyday in Etobicoke-Lakeshore and Tory Ken Kirupa in Scarborough-Guildwood, to the point of telling voters that casting ballots for the "corrupt" Liberals after they wasted almost $600 million in tax money on the power plant cancellations would be "just giving a bank robber another gun."

Changes to 9-1-1 protocol

Firefighters cut from some medical calls

Toronto firefighters are no longer being dispatched to a number of urgent medical calls, prompting concerns within the ranks that opportunities to provide life-saving interventions are being missed.

The changes to the city's 9-1-1 protocol were put into place in June 2012 in an effort to optimize the delivery of emergency services. But according to high-ranking, past and present members of the Toronto Fire Service (TFS), not sending their trucks is putting residents at risk. The decision to stop sending firefighters to the medical calls was made on the recommendation of the city's tiered response committee, which includes representatives from fire, police and EMS.

Motion to terminate

Deputy mayor wants Markham out of arena plan

Markham's deputy mayor wants to end the city's long pursuit of its proposed landmark arena project.

Jack Heath submitted a notice of motion late Wednesday that asks city council to rescind a proposed financial framework for the $325-million arena in September and direct staff to terminate all work with the project's private-sector proponents. The proposed project, near Highway 407 and Kennedy Road, has dominated local politics for more than two years.

Ford crack vid peddler nabbed in police raids

Project Traveller. Mohamed Siad in segregation cell after being stabbed

One of the men who tried to sell the Rob Ford crack video was arrested as part of the Project Traveller raids in north Etobicoke.

Now, Mohamed Siad, 27, an alleged drug and gun dealer, sits in segregation after being stabbed in jail just days following the massive police operation.

Mohamed Siad
TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Siad faces a slew of charges, including participating in a criminal organization, conspiracy and the trafficking of guns and cocaine. An ongoing Torstar News Service investigation reveals that Siad was the man who sat in the back seat of a car on May 3 and showed two Torstar reporters a cellphone video of the mayor appearing to smoke crack cocaine and making homophobic and racist remarks.

Dixon City Bloods

- Mohamed Siad is an alleged member of the Dixon City Bloods street gang. He was married recently.
- A few days after his June 13 arrest, Siad, who goes by the street name "Soya," was stabbed multiple times in the Don Jail.

When police arrested Siad early in the morning of June 13 his home was searched, but the Torstar News Service does not know if police recovered the video. Neither the police nor the Crown attorney on the Project Traveller investigation would discuss the Siad case.

Siad's lawyer also said he could not talk about it due to solicitor-client privilege.

Siad's alleged involvement in criminal activity raises the question of how he came to be involved with the Ford crack video.

Siad, who has not yet made an application for bail, is due back in court Aug 7.

Bay-Bloor pedestrian scramble accused of 'weak performance'

Nearly three years after it was introduced, the Bay-Bloor pedestrian scramble may be nearing the end of its days. The city is considering scrapping it due to lack of use. The city argues the intersection's scramble — which halts all traffic and allows pedestrians to cross in any direction — should be scrapped due to its "weak performance" and its effect on congestion. It was launched in 2010, as part of a city initiative to improve pedestrian safety and traffic flow at major intersections. ANDREW FRANCIS WALLACE/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Murder victims' families

Tim Bosma's widow launches charity

The widow of murder victim Tim Bosma has launched a charity, Tim's Tribute, to provide financial assistance and support to the families of homicide victims.

For 10 weeks after Tim Bosma's disappearance, Sharlene Bosma had to keep making payments on her husband's 2007 Dodge Ram pickup — the same truck he left in on May 6 accompanied by two strangers, and which police allege was stolen before or after the men killed Bosma and burned his body beyond recognition.

In founding Tim's Tribute, Sharlene Bosma said she doesn't want other families in her situation to have to worry about financial matters.

Sammy Yatim

Driver and streetcar off-duty since shooting

A "shaken" driver and a streetcar are taking time off after the shooting of Sammy Yatim last Saturday.

The driver could be off work for weeks as he recovers from the trauma. And the TTC could retire the streetcar's serial number — 4058 — to avoid reminding riders of the killing.

The TTC continued to run the streetcar in which Yatim was killed for two days after the shooting, before finally pulling it from service early Tuesday out of "sensitivity" for the Yatim family.

TTC CEO Andy Byford will talk to the family next week before returning the car to regular duty.

Funeral of Sammy Yatim. Priest calls for the truth as teen's sister calls for action

Remembering a brother

"I never got to tell you how much you meant to me or that you were the best brother ... Sammy was and still is my hero." Sarah Yatim

Sammy Yatim's weeping mother followed his body all the way to the road, her hands raised in front of her.

His friends and family lay their hands on the black hearse as it left Highland Funeral Home in Scarborough on Thursday afternoon.

Yatim, 18, died Saturday after he was shot and killed on a Dundas streetcar. Toronto police Const. James Forcillo is the subject of an SIU investigation into the shooting.

The message at the funeral from family and religious leaders was one of forgiveness, not vengeance. But as emotions ran high, none shied away from spelling out the sudden way Yatim's life had ended as they demanded justice.

Inside, the chapel was packed with more than 150 black-clad mourners who spread into an overflow room. Several young people, including Yatim's sister, wore black T-shirts printed with "9 shots...?" and Yatim's smiling black-and-white yearbook photo.

Yatim's sister, Sarah Yatim, told mourners that her brother, who always made her laugh and whose green sparkly eyes she envied, wasn't the first to die this way. But she expressed hope he would be the last. "His spirit and soul live on, believe me," she said. "I promised him I'd fight for him."

She finished with a request to stop grieving and called for action: "Please, everybody, let's be strong."

The Syriac Orthodox priest, Father Estephanos Issa, said the family does not blame the Toronto police for their son being "brutally attacked" as he held a "Swiss knife," nor did they speak rage against the officer in the days after the shooting.

"We have not come to seek revenge. … They wanted to know the truth," he said. "They surrender to the justice and they do trust that Canada is a land of justice, is a land of peace."

Outside the funeral home, emotions erupted as some mourners clashed with members of the media.

Family friend Joseph Nazar said Yatim's mother was so devastated Wednesday she had barely been able to stand. But on Thursday she rose and followed behind her son.

"She wanted to walk with her son to the last step before they take him," Nazar said. "She just said in Arabic, 'Habibi' — my love. And that's what she was saying all the time."

Kingston Pen. Bernardo to get cushier prison digs?

It's possible, in theory, that schoolgirl killer Paul Bernardo could be transferred from a tiny segregation cell to a medium-security prison by the time the super-secure Kingston Penitentiary is shut down this fall.

Paul Bernardo THE CANADIAN PRESS

But such a transfer is unlikely because of the negative publicity it would generate, says author Rob Tripp, who specializes in prison issues.

Bernardo has requested a transfer to an Ontario medium-security prison, Tripp notes in his blog cancrime.com. "I think it's possible, even for Bernardo," Tripp said, noting there's nothing that bars such a shuffle in the Corrections and Conditional Release Act. "By all accounts, he has been a really good boy inside. … He's not a tough guy. He's not a heavy."

A Correctional Service spokesperson said she cannot speak about where prisoners are housed because of privacy concerns. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

NSA leaker. Snowden walks free into Russia

Defying the U.S., Russia granted Edward Snowden temporary asylum on Thursday, allowing the National Security Agency leaker to slip out of the Moscow airport, where he's been holed up for weeks in hopes of evading espionage charges back home.

Snowden now has plenty of room to roam and continue the bizarre journey that has stretched across half the planet — from Hawaii to Hong Kong to the Russian capital.

Russia appears to have reckoned ending Snowden's airport limbo was worth intensifying a political standoff with the U.S. The White House warned the decision could derail an upcoming summit between the countries' leaders.

The move places a significant strain on already corroded relations with Washington. Putin has been increasingly resentful of U.S. criticism and "meddling." The decision gives Russia cover to depict itself as a defender of human rights.

Russia. Activism could earn foreigners fines up to 100,000 rubles, 15 days in prison, deportation and denial of re-entry

Russia will enforce a new law cracking down on gay-rights activism when it hosts the 2014 Olympics in Sochi, the country's sports minister said Thursday, appearing to contradict assurances to the contrary from the International Olympic Committee.

Russia's contentious law was signed by President Vladimir Putin in late June, imposing fines on individuals accused of spreading "propaganda of nontraditional sexual relations" to minors, and even proposing penalties for those who express these views online or in the news media. Gay-pride rallies also are banned.

"An athlete of nontraditional sexual orientation isn't banned from coming to Sochi," Vitaly Mutko said in an interview with R-Sport, a state sports newswire. "But if he goes out into the streets and starts to propagandize, then of course he will be held accountable."

Mutko emphasized that the law wasn't designed to punish anyone for being gay or lesbian. But, Mutko said, athletes would be punished for propaganda, a word that remains ambiguous under the new law.

Athletes have made individual gestures and called for protests, such as a pride parade, to be held during the Games.

PLAYTESTING

There are three stages to poking the perimeter of a game's rules to see how they can be broken.

1 Solo: The designers take the game for an early spin because "you don't want to expose people to what could end up being a mess."

2 Group: Once glaringly obvious wrinkles are ironed out, grant your fellow designers critical licence and set them loose on your creation.

3 Blind: Find some players and hand them the rulebook to figure things out.

PUBLISHING

When your blind test earns more applause than furrowed brows, the next step is weighing the pros and cons of publishing vs. self-publishing.

"With self-publishing, you get 100 per cent creative control and 100 per cent of the profits," says Cormier. "But it's an astonishing amount of work. Self-publishing designers often find themselves spending a lot more time marketing than actual designing."

With board game cafés popping up all across the country, it's getting easier to get your game on with people who love them as much as you do

andrew.fifield@metronews.ca

You can play at this game across the board

If you spend enough time perusing Twitter bios, you're bound to come across people who list "Catan champion" alongside other accomplishments like "foodie" and "craft-beer enthusiast."

These people are among the many devotees of Settlers of Catan, a wildly popular strategy board game that's often called a "gateway drug" for people who aren't already into the hobby.

But that can't be right, can it? What are so many plugged-in people, with attention spans supposedly digitally shattered by the age of instant gratification, doing hunched over a table, whiling away the hours on something so ... so ... rustic.

"There's nothing new about people gathering to play board games," says gaming evangelist David Minken. "But it's definitely easier to find them."

The Calgary geophysicist encountered something similar when he was living in Oklahoma.

"My house was by a (Frisbee) golf course, which is something I'd never really heard of," he chuckles. "But because it was so close, I got into it. When I got back to Calgary, I found there were a bunch of courses I had no idea existed. The community was so insular.

"The same goes for board games," he adds. "You have the games you like to play and the people you like to play them with."

But that's quickly changing with the massive popularity of board-game cafés across Canada, perhaps none more successful than Toronto's Snakes and Lattes, which has played host to packed rooms and waiting lists since opening in 2010.

"I used to get frustrated with this community," Minken says. "It needs to grow. Video games used to be similar, now they're very mainstream. These cafés are the perfect opportunity."

Inspired by cafés and a weekend spent at Fallcon, an annual confab of Catan settlers and tabletop generals for which he is now an organizer, Minken aims to bring the café experience to Calgary.

"I've ordered modular shelves I can store my games in to create a portable board-game café," he says of his pop-up-shop brainchild. "So if there's a coffee shop that happens to be slow on a Sunday, we can roll everything in there and set up.

"It's not about making money. If it's seen that way, the community will reject it. Immersive games can require multiple playthroughs with people who know the rules. That's what this is about."

It's not just the gamers who are increasingly rallying together. It's the designers, too.

Vancouver-based designer Jay Cormier, who creates games with his partner Sen-Foong Lim, is part of the Game Artisans of Canada, a designer/enthusiast group whose members swap prototypes to put rulesets through their paces in an effort to polish nascent games to a publication-ready shine.

"Anybody who wants to create their own game is going to have a very high bar for what makes a quality board game," Cormier says. "And what most of them find after trying their first design is that they don't meet their own standard of quality."

Game Artisans members have similar standards, Cormier says, providing a collective critical eye detached from the emotional pull designs can have on their creators.

So if success can be found through strength in numbers, board-game culture in Canada is set to thrive.

"The clever thing video games did is build the learning curve into the design," Minken notes. "So by the end you're doing all kinds of things you weren't in the beginning."

Obviously, board games don't have that luxury. What they do bring to the table — literally and figuratively — is a community happy to walk you through the curve.

Now you know where to find them.

DESIGNING A PROTOTYPE

Cormier warns aspiring designers not to get swept up in the romance of seeing their vision beautifully displayed on a tabletop.

"You could easily end up making dozens of prototypes on your way to a finished product," he says. "So thinking that your idea deserves to be fully rendered immediately can be time-consuming."

Cormier and partner Sen-Foong Lim's technique is cheap and easy, using widely available clip art for graphics and common objects for tokens.

"Prototypes don't get to the point where they're publicly available, so we don't run afoul of any copyright laws."

It all starts with an idea, of course.

"Inspiration can come a number of ways," designer Jay Cormier says. "Sometimes it's a setting. Sometimes it's a mechanic. With Belfort, I was playing a lot of Warcraft II and thought that style would make for a great board game."

Game genesis can even begin with something as simple as a name.

"Obviously, a great title can have a huge impact on a game's success. And if that happens to come first, it can help guide you."

Anything but five easy pieces: Jay Cormier's pentagonal board game, Belfort, in various stages of its development. CONTRIBUTED

How to chute your way up the design ladder

If you've ever rallied your opponents to throw their Monopoly tax bill into the Free Parking pot, or stripped Scotland Yard's Mr. X of his black tickets, you're already on your way to becoming a board-game designer.

"Getting into game design often starts with creating house rules," says Vancouver-based designer Jay Cormier. "Finding flaws in an existing game and working to improve them."

Cormier and his partner, Sen-Foong Lim, better known in enthusiast circles as the Bamboozle Brothers, have spent years hunched over their tabletop creations as they tinkered their way to scoring publishing deals for titles like Belfort and Train of Thought.

Jay Cormier
CONTRIBUTED

Cracking the whip on house rules is merely Step 1, though. Step 2 is a little more nebulous.

"Ideas for a game can come from many places," Cormier says. "With Belfort, I was playing a lot of Warcraft II and I thought that would make a great world for a board game. Sending people into the woods to work.

"Other times you think of a mechanic you'd like to try. Or, 'Wouldn't it be cool to have a board game about underwater diving?"

The Bamboozle Brothers are both members of the Game Artisans of Canada, a gaggle of designers and enthusiasts who work together to hone new ideas into a functional game.

According to Cormier, groups like the Game Artisans are the perfect resource for aspiring designers

"Sending your baby to people who are just as critical can really improve a game."

Finding a publisher

So a publisher it is. Where do they hang out?

"The easiest thing is a cold call, whether on a publisher's website or with an email," Cormier says.

That does sound easy.

"That's never worked for us."

Oh.

"The best place to pitch is at a convention. Publishers have their people onsite to play games and talk with designers. It's just a matter of registering and showing up with your bag of games and a few elevator pitches."

Contract negotiations

Congratulations! All your hard work and convention hustle has paid off. Now it's time to get down to brass tacks and carve out your piece of the pie. You would be wise not to overlook an area that's recently become hugely important, courtesy of what's likely in your pocket right now.

"One thing that's getting more important is digital rights, especially apps," says Cormier. "We're working with (German publisher) Queen and we negotiated hard for the digital rights, because this game is particularly suited for an app."

Finish

Enjoy the riches! Well, not quite. There are certainly success stories to be found, but many designers are hobbyists holding down day jobs to keep the wolf from the door — which isn't a bad title for a game.

"The only way to make game design an occupation is to either have a bunch of games out there or score with something evergreen," says Cormier. "A game like Settlers of Catan or Pandemic that somebody, somewhere is always buying."

But Belfort is holding its own. Cormier and Lim have deals in Germany and Poland, a third printing has been released in North America, and a Kickstarter-funded expansion is on the way.

Get funded — how to kickstart your million-dollar idea

So you have an amazing idea for the greatest board game in history.

But there's a problem: Getting startup cash. What's the simplest way to get money? Ask people for it.

It's time for Kickstarter, the world's most successful crowdfunding website. Like Indiegogo, it offers products, privileges and other thank-yous for a pledged donation.

There's big money in it. Try these figures for size: In 2012, more than $319 million was pledged to campaigns by more than 2.2 million people. That's more than $600 a minute. In all, 18,109 projects, from board games to books to movies, hit target.

Sounds like easy money, right? Wrong.

Luca Vince Caltabiano, of Montreal, is the creator of Carmarace, this week's leading Canadian tabletop game on Kickstarter. With 22 days to go, it's about halfway to its $23,000 target for production costs.

"It's a board game for one to six players and everybody's playing hitchhikers trying to get to a convention," explains Caltabiano. It's card-based and includes bikes, planes and trains, cop chases, and old ladies in the road.

Caltabiano's been hyping his game like crazy, posting on every online meeting place he can think of. It's eating a lot of his time.

"I have a newfound respect for everybody who does Kickstarter," he says. "Just setting up the campaign took about a week and the (promo) video took 80 hours to produce."

But now he just needs to hit his target. That should be easy, right? Wrong again.

Plenty of crowdfunding projects just don't go anywhere. AppsBlogger.com has estimated about half of all projects don't reach their targets.

Then there are the successful failures, like The Doom that Came to Atlantic City, a board game about an invasion of monsters.

It raised more than four times its $35,000 goal. More than 1,200 people pledged more than $122,000 in total. But last week its Portland, Ore., creators pulled the plug, citing inexperience, technical problems and ego clashes. The "hope" is to refund everyone fully. Lots of people are angry.

But when Kickstarter's good, it's very good. Bones was a project by Reaper Miniatures of Denton, Texas, offering miniature figures for role-playing games. It had a target of $30,000 but closed in August 2012 after raising $3,429,235 from more than 17,000 people.

The millions are there. All you need is an idea. MIKE DONACHIE/METRO

TTC CUSTOMER CHARTER PROMISES REMAIN ON TRACK

ANDY BYFORD
CEO
TORONTO TRANSIT COMMISSION

The results of our second quarter Customer Charter commitments are now posted on our website and I am pleased to say that we delivered on all eight targets.

In addition to acceptance of five more state-of-the-art Toronto Rocket subway trains into our fleet, highlights include progress on a number of projects designed to improve our overall service.

After extensive consultation with staff and union representatives, we have finalized the design of the new uniform for station staff and vehicle operators, ready for rollout in 2014. We want our employees to wear the new uniform with pride, so a lot of thought has gone into the design to make it both practical and smart. Look for an unveiling in the coming months!

Our security model is also being overhauled and we have held very positive discussions with the Toronto Police Service and its Board to reach agreement in principle to restore Special Constable status to our Transit Enforcement Officers (TEOs) with a target implementation date of this fall.

Special Constable status will allow our TEOs to be much more effective in keeping customers and fellow staff safe and secure, working evermore closely with police.

At Lawrence West Station, work is well and truly underway to install an elevator and other easier access features. Meanwhile, our maintenance blitz of stations continues, including restoration of the terrazzo floors and cleaning of light fixtures across the subway network.

As I have said before, the most important target remains delivery of safe, punctual transit and I will discuss progress against this objective next week.

Cleveland kidnapper gets life plus 1,000 years

'I'm not a monster. I'm sick'. Ariel Castro blames sex addiction for behaviour as court hears horrific details of women's confinement

Ariel Castro, right, speaks during the sentencing phase as defence attorney Craig Weintraub watches Thursday in Cleveland. Castro was sentenced to life in prison plus 1,000 years. TONY DEJAK/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Cleveland, Ohio, man convicted of holding three women captive in his house for over a decade and raping them repeatedly was sentenced Thursday to life without parole plus 1,000 years.

Ariel Castro, 53, had pleaded guilty to 937 counts including aggravated murder, kidnapping, rape and assault.

Castro apologized and told the court he's addicted to pornography, but he claimed that most of the sex with the women was consensual.

"These people are trying to paint me as a monster," he said. "I'm not a monster. I'm sick."

The women described horrific conditions in the home, which Castro turned into a jury-rigged prison.

"You took 11 years of my life away, and I have got it back," Michelle Knight told Castro on Thursday. "I spent 11 years in hell. Now your hell is just beginning. I will overcome all this, but you will face hell for eternity." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Brazeau. Senator broke law filing inappropriate expenses, RCMP say

The RCMP are alleging after a preliminary investigation that Sen. Patrick Brazeau broke the law by filing inappropriate Senate expense claims, according to court documents released Thursday.

RCMP Corp. Greg Horton filed a request for documents in which he alleges Brazeau committed a breach of trust, a criminal offence, in the former Conservative senator's handling of his expense accounts.

Horton said in a sworn affidavit the Mounties' investigation so far shows that Brazeau did not live in a house he claimed as his primary residence in Maniwaki, Que.

Under Senate rules, senators can charge up to $22,000 a year in taxpayer-funded living expenses for a residence in the Ottawa area if their primary residence is at least 100 kilometres away.

Italy

Berlusconi's conviction, sentence upheld

Italy's former premier Silvio Berlusconi was definitively convicted of tax fraud and sentenced to four years in prison Thursday by the nation's highest court.

The tensely awaited decision was described as a historical moment by opposition politicians and puts fresh pressure on Premier Enrico Letta's fragile coalition government. He needs the support of Berlusconi supporters and his own party to push through reforms to get Italy out of recession, and the ruling is likely to have a destabilizing impact.

Boycott of Russian vodka takes a twist

Global action. The drink is being targeted due to Russia's anti-LGBT laws — but should a pro-gay brand get an exception?

EMILY JACKSON
Metro in Vancouver

It's being poured down bar sinks around the world to protest Russia's draconian laws against the LGBT community, but Stolichnaya vodka will be served at the Kinky Pride Party in Vancouver after the city's Pride parade Sunday night.

Event organizer Reive Doig of the Noir Fetish Ball was supportive when he first heard of the boycott, originally proposed by American columnist Dan Savage to pressure Russia to change its "gay propaganda" legislation before the 2014 Sochi Olympics.

But when Doig read about Stoli's support of the LGBT community in places such as South Africa, he decided the boycott unfairly hurt a company trying to help. "Stoli has worked with the gay community. They're trying to make a difference where they can and it just seems wrong to me," he said. "They deserve not to be tarred with the same brush."

Calgary. TransCanada says it's going ahead with Energy East pipeline

TransCanada Corp. is moving ahead with a $12-billion plan to ship western oil to the East Coast — the largest project in the company's history and one it compares to the Canadian Pacific Railway in economic impact for the country and trade benefits overseas.

The Calgary-based company said it has enough support from customers to forge ahead with its Energy East pipeline, which would deliver up to 1.1 million barrels per day to points in Quebec in late 2017 and New Brunswick a year later.

The project, which still faces regulatory hurdles, has the support of the Alberta and New Brunswick governments, but it's not clear whether Quebec has been won over.

Critics have already vowed to fight the project, which they describe as unsafe and unlikely to deliver on job creation and energy-security promises. THE CANADIAN PRESS

1 Apocalypse sooner than you think. Researchers from the University of Victoria figure a runaway greenhouse effect will cause the Earth's oceans to boil a lot sooner than expected — as early as half a billion years from now instead of the originally projected 1.1 billion. Before you get lulled into a false sense of complacency, another study says 1,700 U.S. coastal cities will be under water by 2100. Cancel my calls!

2 A gift for his adoring fans. Justin Bieber was let loose in Toronto this week and took some time out to allegedly spit on his fans. That is, there are photos of him spitting from his hotel balcony, photos of the adoring fans down below, but no money shot. For the record: Bieber's spokesperson denies he spit on anyone on that day. Job of the week: Justin Bieber's spokesperson.

3 And in other news, Justin. The leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, Justin Trudeau, decides it's time to call for the legalization of marijuana. Is this a calculated gamble to appeal to a younger generation of voters? At least he didn't spit on anyone. Expectations are getting pretty low out there.

4 What a guy. As far as Pope Francis is concerned, it's OK to be gay ("Who am I to judge?"). But there's a catch: You can't actually have gay sex. Ever. Just in case you had any ideas. And while we're at it, no female priests either. You can only take this "progressive" stuff so far, and we're all the way up to the 18th century now.

5 From Russia; where's the love? After spending a month in the Moscow airport, Edward Snowden, the guy who revealed that the U.S. National Security Agency monitors everything, all the time, was granted temporary asylum by the Russians. Good thing he's not gay — the homophobic state would have put him in jail for a real crime.

6 Hey there, Georgie Boy. Despite all of the above, the newest heir to the British throne, George Alexander Louis, is now almost two weeks old. But it's not likely he'll ever wear the crown. Grandfather Charles is next up, then father William, but the way QE2 is going, she'll outlive them all!

7 Fortuitous book launch. If you think dating is difficult, try this one on for size. In an effort to find the woman of his dreams, a man from Australia wrote a 99-page dating guide called The Cock Manifesto. Despite the title, it's not just a phallic reference, but includes everything from his dislike for "players," to explicit requests for photos of the potential girlfriend's nether regions. Carlos Danger, a.k.a. Anthony Weiner, may have met his match.

Meet the android that imitates us

An engineer provides the final touches to a nearly completed RoboThespian robot at the Engineered Arts factory in the town of Penryn, England. The firm is the world's only maker of commercially available life-sized humanoid robots. The interactive android is sold worldwide to visitor attractions and universities.

The company dismissed concerns about its humanoid robots setting out to destroy humans as in I, Robot, the book by Isaac Asimov and the movie starring Will Smith. "Our robots are for entertainment; they don't desire to take over the world," said Gill Spencer, administrator at Engineered Arts. METRO

Company's viewpoint

"The robot is designed to imitate our movements and expressions. And it's multilingual, too, fluent in more than 20 languages. People are fascinated by them."

Gill Spencer, administrator at Engineered Arts

Cost and uses of bot

- $83,600 US is how much one RoboThespian android costs, and it's for sale to the public.
- RoboThespian (meaning "robot actor") is used in live stage shows — popular in South Korea.

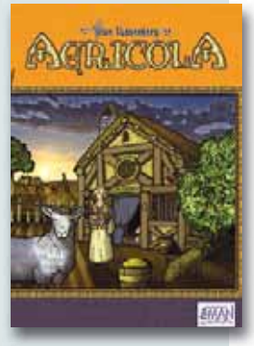
In honour of today's board games feature, we're going to give a little love to board games that have gone on to second lives as mobile apps.



Ticket to Ride

Outwit and stymie your opponents as everyone rushes to claim train routes across North America. Drawing route cards adds a nice risk-reward component to the game, but nothing is as fun as derailing the best-laid plans of your opponents. (iPad/$6.99)

Agricola

Best described as a mix between farming and family planning, Agricola removes the luck typically associated with board games and instead forces you to rely purely on strategy. Learning the ropes can be a little dense, but it's the game's depth that rewards the players. (iOS/$6.99)

Scotland Yard

Take on the role of either master criminal Mr. X or the detectives tasked with chasing him through London. The board game has achieved well-deserved cult status, but the lousy AI can sometimes hold the digital version back. (iOS/$5.99)

RE: Feds To Spend Less On Science, Tech, Finds Statistics Canada, published online July 30

The better debate is whether or not the government should spend taxpayers' money on innovation initiatives.

The government is less prudent with every dollar spent than the private sector because the government inherently assumes less risk. Failed government initiatives decrease taxpayers' standard of living because they indirectly pick up the bill.

Besides, the companies that receive science and technology funds are based on arbitrary criteria set by policy makers.

This gives an unfair competitive advantage to certain companies in the industry. The better solution is to tax science and technology companies less rather than redistributing dollars after the fact, which is not very efficient, or provide better tax credits. Both are indiscriminate solutions.

It is best that the government get out of the innovation business before they find themselves in a gassy scandal.

Synopsis

This weekend Denzel Washington and Mark Wahlberg team up in the action comedy 2 Guns. They play a DEA agent and an undercover Naval Intelligence officer, respectively, on the run after an investigation into a drug cartel goes wrong. It's the first time the two superstars have appeared together on-screen, but both have played characters like this in the past. This week the Reel Guys are rifling through their Blu Rays, DVDs, Laser-Discs and video cassettes to uncover the best and perhaps lesser known work of the actors we like to call Washingberg.

Denzel Washington and Mark Wahlberg both have pretty good track records when it comes to acting. CONTRIBUTED

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

We love Washingberg

Roles review. With 2 Guns hitting theatres this weekend, the Reel Guys remember their fave Denzel and Marky Mark movies

Richard: Mark, Washington has played his share of attorneys and policemen over the years, but he has never been afraid to try new things, as he did in 1993's Much Ado About Nothing. In this all-star adaptation of Shakespeare's most famous romantic comedy, he plays the powerful Don Pedro of Aragon. The movie took hits for its miscasting of Keanu Reeves and Michael Keaton in key roles, but Washington was praised for his work. Do you have a favourite Denzel performance?

Mark: Richard, where to start? I've never seen a bad Denzel performance. Never. It's one thing to make Shakespeare come alive onscreen, but he can even make a turkey like The Book of Eli worth watching. Was he fantastic as Malcolm X? Yes. As the private eye in Devil In A Blue Dress? Of course. How about the plotless Flight from last year? He's the whole movie. A thriller like The Taking of Pelham 1-2-3? Nobody plays ordinary like this extraordinary actor. But if you're forcing me to name my favourite Denzel role, it would have to be as the crooked cop in Training Day. I just love it when good guys play bad.

RC: He's not afraid to explore the dark side of his characters and it is not a guarantee that he will be alive by the time the end credits roll. That's a comment on an actor who brings some much welcome moral ambiguity to his roles. Similarly Wahlberg is an actor who likes to shake things up. In the last calendar year we've seen him do outrageous comedy in Ted, playing stupid in Pain and Gain and a revenge happy ex-cop in Broken City. Like Washington, the only thing that connects all the performances is the actor's charisma.

MB: Y-y-y-yes, but you can't quite put them in the same league. I thought Wahlberg was excellent in his last two movies, Pain and Gain, and the underrated Broken City. He was OK in Ted, but really, it's weird for an actor to get upstaged by a teddy bear. If I'm looking for a definitive Wahlberg performance, it would have to be his work in The Departed.

RC: The Departed is great and may be his best performance to date if only because he rivals Samuel L. Jackson's ability with swear words in almost every sentence.

MB: And back to Pain and Gain. A director should make his actors look good, but it's to Wahlberg's credit that he makes his director, Michael Bay, look good. No small achievement.

Action/Comedy

2 Guns

Director. Baltasar Kormakur

Stars. Denzel Washington, Mark Wahlberg

2 Guns, a new action comedy, is what's called a refrigerator movie. It seems to add up while you're watching it, but later, when you're at home in front of the fridge looking for a snack and thinking back, you realize that it didn't make any sense. Not that it matters when you have Denzel Washington and Mark Wahlberg as a DEA agent and an undercover Naval Intelligence officer on the run after an investigation into a drug cartel goes wrong. They have charisma to burn and good chemistry.
RICHARD CROUSE

Drama

Blue Jasmine

Director. Woody Allen

Stars. Cate Blanchett, Alec Baldwin

Woody Allen's latest film centres on the single most annoying character of any recent film. Jasmine (Cate Blanchett) is the widow of a Bernie Madoff type (Alec Baldwin) who is now out of money and options. Leaving NYC behind for a free place to stay with her sister (Sally Hawkins) in San Francisco, her self-centered, haughty attitude combined with her toxic past make it near impossible to build a future. Less a comedy in Allen's traditional vein, this is a character study brilliantly performed. The movie meanders somewhat, but expect an Oscar nomination for Blanchett. RICHARD CROUSE

Drama/Horror/Thriller

Berberian Sound Studio

Director. Peter Strickland

Stars. Toby Jones, Susanna Cappellaro

Taking its soul and psychology from those great, designer Italian giallo films of the 1970's, Berberian Sound Studio is unlike any film you'll ever see. In it, Toby Jones stars as a cinema foley artist hired by a macho Italian director to give audio life to a gory, erotic exploitation film. As he sinks deeper into the baroque mechanics of the production, he slowly, surely loses his mind. Surreal, stylized and sublime filmmaking.
CHRIS ALEXANDER

Thriller

The Canyons

Director. Paul Schrader

Stars. Lindsay Lohan, James Deen

The making of The Canyons has been a documented mess from the start and it certainly shows on-screen. In possibly the worst film of 2013, Lohan plays the girlfriend of a manipulating movie producer (played by porn star James Deen) who justifiably becomes fiercely jealous of his lover's possible infidelity. It's supposed to be titillating but this wet blanket is more rank than risqué. When Lohan's character growls that, "maybe movies aren't my thing anymore," it's not just pointless dialogue — it's prophetic. STEVE GOW

Drama

The Attack

Director. Ziad Doueiri

Stars. Ali Suliman

Amin Jaafari, a prominent Arab doctor living in Tel Aviv, finds his life turned upside down after a terrorist bombing kills his wife. But when she's accused of being the suicide bomber responsible for the attack, Jaafari heads home to Nablus in the West Bank to discover the truth for himself. What he finds soon leaves him torn between two interconnected worlds. Director and co-writer Ziad Doueiri successfully navigates the murky territory of the Arab-Israeli relations by making the politics personal. He offers no easy answers in giving both perspectives.
IAN GORMELY

Documentary

A People Uncounted

Director. Aaron Yeger

The Roma people have been discriminated against for the last 1,000 years when they left northern India and moved west and north. Forced to wander due to bans against Roma property ownership in most of Europe and the U.K., they were shunned as thieves and parasites. Yeger provides proof of the unimaginable cruelties they suffered under the Third Reich with heartbreaking interviews with Roma survivors. And his man-on-the-street interviews reveal widespread anti-Roma prejudice that thrives today.

Dane Cook on the finer points of Planes

Dissecting a kids' film. Why are there crops and passenger planes in a vehicular world, Mr. Cook?

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Dane Cook is the voice of Dusty Crophopper in Planes, which opens next week. CONTRIBUTED

Disney's new animated feature, Planes, extends the universe introduced in Cars and Cars 2, but in watching the film we were left with a fair number of logistical questions. So we turned to the film's star, Dane Cook, to address some of our more pressing quandaries. "I don't know if you're supposed to think about it as deeply as this," he cautioned, but he was a good sport about it anyway.

You play a cropduster in the film. Who are the crops for?
That is, um … it's for esthetics. Because (the town of) Propwash Junction, it needs to have a dynamic look to it. Those crops just make it on the fringe.

The film features some giant passenger jets. What are they doing? Who are they carrying?
Maybe there's very small planes that are travelling inside of them. Maybe there are remote-controlled planes, the little toy kind. They can't fly over the ocean, they're battery operated.

If cars and planes exist in the same world, why aren't the bigger, faster, stronger planes the dominant species and ruling over the cars?
I think planes are pretty passive, and I think they enjoy their car brethren, as we can say. They're a peaceful mechanical piece of engineering.

The term "engine failure" comes up. Wouldn't that just mean that a plane is dead?
That would probably mean that particular plane is maybe having a cramp. I would say that sometimes when I'm jogging I say, "Oh, I'm having a bit of engine failure." And then I usually have to stop and get some water.

Where is a plane's sense of self? And how many parts can you change out before it's just a completely new plane?
It's like humans. You can go in and you can have a kidney removed, you can now have heart valves or pacemakers put in. It's kind of the same thing.

The Second World War is mentioned in one character's back-story. So is there a vehicular Hitler in the Cars universe, and if so what kind of vehicle was he?
That might be a spin-off. You're onto something. I think if enough people start blogging about this, then Disney would have to answer the call (laughs). I hadn't thought about that one. I'd thought of the other ones, but that's good. In my whole career, that will be the most obtuse, wild question.

As Breaking Bad wraps, star reflects on 'greatest character of my career'

Breaking Bad. Cast, creator gather to talk final eight episodes and great series moments

MEREDITH ENGEL
Metro World News in New York City

As we prepare to say goodbye to Breaking Bad, the cast and creator Vince Gilligan gathered in New York on Tuesday for a TimesTalk panel discussion with New York Times reporter Dave Itzkoff.

The event, which was livestreamed on the Times' website, featured Bryan Cranston, Anna Gunn, Aaron Paul, Dean Norris, Betsy Brandt, RJ Mitte and Bob Odenkirk, in addition to Gilligan. It covered everything from the emergence of the characters to the last days of Walter White et al.

As the series winds down, with the first of eight final episodes airing Aug. 11 on AMC, Gilligan told audiences that ending now was the right decision.

"Every story has its beginning, middle and end," he said. "This (show) was not designed to go on forever. It needed to end."

The panellists were tight-lipped on the final eight episodes, only saying that the third-from-last episode "is gonna knock your f—ing socks off," as Gilligan told it. They did, however, share insight into their characters with audience members and reveal behind-the-scenes tidbits about some of the series' most popular moments.

Cranston, who has won three consecutive Emmys for his role as Walter White (and is nominated for a fourth this year), told audience members that he wanted to "lift my leg up and spray (Gilligan) with my scent" when he read the pilot because he was so interested in getting the role. He had appeared on episodes of The X-Files that Gilligan had written as a similar character — a villain that somehow audience members sympathized with. Playing that role, Gilligan said, convinced executives that Cranston was fit to be Walter White.

Cranston called the role "the greatest character of my career," saying that he doesn't think he'll have the chance to become a character "so rich, deep, varied" again. "The spectrum of emotions that Walter White can justifiably play are uncanny," he said. "It's a playground for an actor and I'm so grateful for it."

Gunn, who plays Walt's long-suffering wife Skyler, offered a look into the mind of her character. She noted the challenge Gilligan faced in writing a "very, very smart woman" who at the same time was unaware of her husband's shady practices for quite awhile.

"The quality that she shares with Walt that makes it so interesting is her intellect is, I think as sharp as his, and it's also her downfall as a human being," Gunn said. "She thinks that that intellect can fix everything. She thinks she can control this uncontrollable situation. … And yet everything she does actually makes things worse and gets her in deeper, and finally she realizes that she's actually backed so far into a corner that she has nowhere to move.

"She really does become a prisoner in her own home, and the feeling I have is that the only thing playing over and over and over in her mind was, 'How do I get my kids to safety? How do I keep my kids safe?'"

Actors Bryan Cranston and Aaron Paul speak onstage during the Breaking Bad panel discussion. GETTY IMAGES

Paul similarly spoke about the journey his character, Jesse Pinkman, has been on, a character who was originally slated to die by the end of Season 1.

"He was just this lost kid struggling, trying to find his way," Paul said, "trying to be someone who he really truly wasn't, and then as the more layers were revealed you see that he's just in this constant search for some sort of guidance. And he latched himself onto I think Walter White … he just wanted to learn from him. He's just never really had the support of his parents and so he looked, at least I saw it as Jesse looking up to Walter White as a fatherly figure — a dysfunctional fatherly figure."

Charity. One Direction singer Tomlinson signs contract with English soccer club Doncaster, expects to raise money for charity

One Direction singer Louis Tomlinson's career is heading in a new direction.

The boy band star signed up to play a game for English football club Doncaster, a team that plays in the second-tier League Championship.

The announcement — labelled "breaking news" by Britain's 24-hour sports news channel — will see Tomlinson given the No. 28 shirt in his club's squad.

"This has always been a childhood dream for me," the 21-year-old Tomlinson said. "I feel very honoured to have been asked to sign for Rovers."

Louis Tomlinson. GETTY IMAGES

Before finding global fame after One Direction placed third on the British version of The X Factor in 2010, Tomlinson did part time work at Doncaster's stadium, serving food.

But he always hoped to pull on the shirt of his hometown club in northern England one day.

"We often play football with the lads, any time we get," Tomlinson said. "Sometimes we might be on the road and just pull over at 3 a.m. at a local service station and just have a bit of a kick-around."

But One Directioners shouldn't worry about not seeing the group performing as a quintet again. Tomlinson reassured fans he's not leaving the band and is only likely to play in a reserve team game in September or October to raise money for a children's hospice.

"He's missed pre-season training already," Doncaster manager Paul Dickov quipped on Sky Sports TV.

Do you want to know how much sex this teen pop-star is having?

Harry Styles reveals some startling details about his sexual history in a candid interview with the British edition of GQ magazine, buckling under the interviewer's questions about how many people the One Direction star has slept with.

"It's definitely less than 100," Styles offers. "I'm not doing this! You're cornering me!"

But he finally gives in, offering these details.

"Two people. I've only ever had sex with two people. That's my answer. Read from it what you will."

And if that's not enough candor for one day, Styles addresses rumours that he's bisexual.

"Bisexual? Me? I don't think so," he says. "I'm pretty sure I'm not."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

Remember that episode when Stephanie Tanner did meth? Well, it's a two-parter

THE WORD
Alexandra Cavallo
scene@metronews.ca

How rude! That's probably what Jodi Sweetin (a.k.a. Stephanie Tanner) is saying to all the nosy journos going around writing that she's in rehab again. If you didn't know, former child stars try to use their characters' key catchphrases as often as possible — it helps people to remember that they were once pretty famous and that the mess they've since made of their adult lives is whatever.

Jokes aside, the story of Sweetin's life post-Full House actually is a sad one. While the Olsen twins went on to rule the world from behind hundreds of layers of draped clothing and giant Starbucks cups, and Candace Cameron went on to find God, Sweetin (formerly the most adorable cast member of Full House and that includes Uncle Jesse) went on to become a meth addict and a three-time divorcée. But she cleaned up her act, admirably, and seemed to be on the right track, working as a counsellor at a rehab facility.

Which is why it really is pretty rude that she's now battling rumours (she's claiming they are 100 per cent unfounded) that she, herself, is back on meth and back in rehab. Give the girl a break, you guys — the only cast member who fared worse after Full House called it quits is Uncle Joey. That guy was the worst.

Justin Bieber

Bieber won't see hit-and-run charges

Finally, some good legal news for Justin Bieber.

The Los Angeles district attorney's office has decided not to file hit-and-run charges against the singer in connection to an alleged run-in with a photographer last month, stating that there is no way to prove Bieber fled the scene intentionally, according to E! News.

"There were over a dozen paparazzi surrounding his car and on the sidewalk, and it was noisy with camera flashes and bright lights surrounding him," a spokesperson for the department says. "The Ferrari's engine is loud. The impact was minor and, given the chaotic scene and stress of the situation, it is likely that Bieber did not know he had hit (the photographer)."

Modern port revolution

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy
liquidassets@eastlink.ca

When I mentioned port last week, I got to thinking how the boozy wonder is pigeonholed as a cold weather, after dinner bevy. While the majority of port styles are just too heavy for summer, there are two versions that meet the heat head-on.

White port is produced by most houses. Made to be chilled, it runs the flavour profiles of dry to sweet. The sweeter versions are the base of a popular summer mixer in Portugal's region of Porto. Trouble is, port being white is so foreign to Canadians that you'll have trouble finding one at your local liquor store.

Croft has been fortifying juice since 1588. You'd think that would make it one of the stodgiest, old school wine makers in Portugal. Nope. It's led the modern port revolution: inject some fun and versatility into the category.

The rosé-esque Croft Pink Port ($16.55 - $19.99) is more at home in an ice bucket than at a snooty men's club. Layered with berry goodness, it's the foundation of more than a dozen refreshing cocktails that can all be found at croftpink.com. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. Food Day Canada.
Support local farmers this long weekend

It's been a decade since food crusader Anita Stewart encouraged Canadians to support farmers in the wake of the mad cow crisis threatening their livelihood by launching the World's Longest Barbecue.

Stewart's event has morphed into Food Day Canada, a day in which chefs and home cooks across the country can applaud Canada's bounty.

Not only are people encouraged to spreads from produce purchased at farmers markets, but they are also able to dine at about 275 restaurants from across the country that are participating this Saturday with menus featuring uniquely Canadian ingredients.

Stewart hopes people will post their menus and describe their plans at fooddaycanada.ca. There are plenty of recipes there too for inspiration.

An interactive map includes the locations of farmers markets and Food Day restaurants across the country "so it should be a guide of how to eat Canadian," she explains. The idea is "you can go and buy your good stuff here and here are the restaurants where you too can go and eat."

Here, Stewart shares her recipe for Pavlova, which features fresh local fruit.

1. Lightly butter baking sheet and line with parchment. Beat egg whites till stiff enough to hold soft peaks. Slowly beat in the sugar, few spoonfuls at a time. This will take 3 minutes. Sift the cornstarch over meringue and lightly fold it in with the vinegar.

2. Drop meringue onto centre of prepared pan. With spatula spread it to an 8-inch (20 cm) circle, smoothing the top and the sides. Bake in a preheated 250 F (120 C) oven for 1 hour and 20 minutes. Remove from the oven and allow to cool on the pan. Store in an airtight container or use immediately.

3. To fill, whip the cream with the sugar until stiff. Invert Pavlova onto serving dish. The smooth bottom becomes the top of dessert. Spoon whipped cream over the entire surface. Arrange fresh fruit on top. Serve. THE CANADIAN PRESS/ RECIPE ADAPTED FROM ANITA STEWART'S CANADA: THE FOOD, THE RECIPES, THE STORIES (HARPER COLLINS CANADA)

Canada hoops camp kicks off with a buzz

Turning the corner. Emerging Canadian and NBA talent point toward higher expectations on the world stage

Canada basketball general manager Steve Nash leads guards during drills. The men's national basketball team started practising at the Air Canada Centre in Toronto on Thursday in preparation for the FIBA Americas Championship in Venezuela. The top four teams from the Aug. 30-Sept. 11 tournament qualify for the 2014 World Cup. RENE JOHNSTON/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

They trickled into the gym one by one in the quiet of a Thursday morning, bringing with them different backgrounds, varied experiences and disparate expectations.

Some of them are barely more than kids starting a promising journey to fame and riches; some of them are relatively grizzled veterans seeking to improve the game they love in a country they love.

Young. Old. Established. Neophytes.

They all want the same thing as the job of restoring some lustre to Canada's international basketball reputation began in earnest at the Air Canada Centre practice gym, the Toronto training-camp base for the national team.

"To make Canada better," said Junior Cadougan. "To make a name for our country."

It's Step 1 in a long journey.

Quoted

"Now everyone sees and they want to follow and do the right thing."

Canadian point guard Junior Cadougan

The players arrived from their pre-camp physicals to find 38-year-old two-time MVP Steve Nash putting an 11-year-old and a nine-year-old through some shooting drills before he moved on to more serious pursuits with a handful of young Canadian point guards.

Some arrived looking to establish themselves as integral parts of the future of a promising program; some arrived to make sure their legacy included helping Canada take its next step up the global ladder.

They are all in the week-long initial training camp with one goal and it was an intriguing moment in the evolution of the program. It will be an interesting summer for the team, a summer of significance but also a summer of transition.

"You see plenty of opportunities happening," said Cadougan, the Toronto native trying to play for the senior national team for the first time. "You see guys getting to the NBA, guys playing ball overseas and doing great, making a good name for Canada. Now everyone sees and they want to follow and do the right thing."

The program will eventually belong to the kids; to Anthony Bennett, to Kelly Olynyk, to Andrew Wiggins. But this year, when qualifying for the 2014 FIBA World Cup is of paramount importance, it is a summer when youth must meld with experience, when old must meet new. And teach it.

Playoff implications at play in MLB's PED decision, source says

Biogenesis scandal. Monday said to be league's deadline for players to make deals

Looming playoffs could force an end to negotiations in baseball's latest drug scandal as pressure builds to impose penalties so stars can still make the post-season.

Monday appears to be the deadline for Alex Rodriguez and 13 others to accept suspensions for their ties to the Biogenesis of America anti-aging clinic. While A-Rod is expected to get a lengthy ban, a penalty starting that day would allow Texas all-star Nelson Cruz to return for October.

Major League Baseball is prepared to issue two announcements no later than Monday, a person familiar with the process told The Associated Press on Thursday. One would list players who accept suspensions; the other would name those disciplined without deals, but who could challenge penalties before an arbitrator.

Alex Rodriguez is reportedly facing a lifetime ban for his role in MLB's drug scandal. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The person spoke on condition of anonymity because no statements were authorized.

Most players face 50-game suspensions for their links to the now-closed Florida clinic, which has been accused of distributing banned performance-enhancing drugs. But baseball is threatening to ban Rodriguez for life unless he agrees to a long ban, perhaps around 200 games.

Rodriguez appeared ready to talk Thursday as he was leaving the team's minor league complex in Tampa, Fla. However, when he saw a second group with TV cameras approaching, he said: "I'll talk to you guys, but no cameras."

He waited a moment, then left without saying another word. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Give Armstrong his titles back, former rider Ullrich says

Lance Armstrong should have his seven Tour de France wins reinstated due to the prevalence of doping at the time, according to former cyclist Jan Ullrich.

"I would give Armstrong the Tour victories back. ... That's how it was back then," Ullrich told the current edition of Sport Bild magazine. "It doesn't help anyone to draw a line through the winners' list."

Ullrich, who won the Tour in 1997, finished second to Armstrong on three occasions (2000, 2001 and 2003) but the German declined to stake a claim for his former rival's stripped titles.

"I only want victories that I've experienced on the bike," he said.

Armstrong acknowledged in January that he doped for all seven of his Tour wins from 1999 to 2005. He was subsequently stripped of the titles. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Horoscopes

Aries
March 21 - April 20
Try to take things at a more reasonable pace. The more you relax and let life come to you, the more you will enjoy the day and the more likely it is love, in some form, will come your way.

Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You have more in common with someone than you realize and what happens over the next 24 hours will prove it. Make an effort to get to know them and you will soon be firm friends — and maybe more.

Gemini
May 22 - June 21
What is right for you may not be right for someone else, so don't try to stop a loved one doing something you don't agree with. It takes all kinds to make a world — that's what makes it so interesting.

Cancer
June 22 - July 23
What friends and lovers are looking for from you is understanding. Can you give it to them? Open your ears and listen to their problems — then open your heart and do something about them.

Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Stand back from what you are doing and make sure you have not strayed away from your original intentions. A few minor adjustments now makes it less likely you will have to make major adjustments later on.

Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Don't try too hard today. The planets suggest that the less you put in, the more you will get out. Why struggle when you don't have to?

Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
With Venus, your ruler, moving through the most sensitive area of your chart, you may not be able to express yourself as easily as usual but that does not mean you love less. Make sure loved ones know that.

Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Today's Venus-Mars link will endow you with so much passion you may have a hard time deciding how to put it all to good use. Do whatever takes your fancy. Just act.

Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Focus on what gives you pleasure today rather than on what you think others expect. If you get the chance to mix business and pleasure, that's great but don't think you have to put money and career first.

Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You can't put a foot wrong at the moment and today's Venus-Mars link will smooth your path more. Relationships are under great influences. Let the object of your affection know how in love you are.

Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
There is nothing you can't do, nothing that cannot be made to work. The only danger is that with so many options available you may spend more time thinking than acting. Choose a goal, then go for it.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You're on the right wavelength with partners and loved ones at the moment and that means all things are possible – if you work together. SALLY BROMPTON
